TREE OF LIFE STORY

Western Red Cedar: “Life Giver” for Many Coastal Indians

The Western Red Cedar is often referred to as “the cornerstone of northwest coastal Indian culture.” Known as the “Tree of Life” and “Life Giver,” some tribes called themselves “People of the Cedar.” Groves of ancient cedars were symbols of power and gathering places for ceremonies, retreats, and contemplation.

All parts of the tree were utilized, providing:

- Shelter Lodges, lash-house timbers, planks, posts, and roof boards
- Tools and Utensils Baskets, ropes, fishing nets, bowls, and boxes
- Clothing Skirts, capes, and dresses
- Medicinal Remedies Poultices and teas

A photograph of a modern house with a wooden deck and a stainless steel grill. The house has a gabled roof and a chimney. The deck is made of dark wood and features a stainless steel grill with a wooden cutting board and various kitchen utensils hanging on the wall behind it. A concrete walkway leads to a glass-paned door and a solid wooden door. The scene is set at dusk or dawn, with a soft glow from the interior lights.

From the past through today, Western Red Cedar remains a vital part of the Pacific Northwest Native American culture and heritage, offering symbols from long ago and products we use and admire every day. In the Pacific Northwest, this beautiful, sturdy, and versatile tree continues to grace us with its many gifts.
